PROPHET ILYAS

In a small village full of tall trees and green fields, people lived simple lives. But they worshipped large stone idols that they had placed in the village square. Every day, they gathered around them and asked them for help.

PROPHET ILYAS

One sunny morning, Ilyas stood in the middle of the square. His sky-blue cloak gleamed softly. In a warm voice, he said, "My people, why do you worship these idols? They cannot hear you or provide for you. Allah created us all, and He is always close to us."

One of the men answered angrily, "These are our gods! We inherited them from our ancestors. How can we leave them?"

PROPHET ILYAS

A boy named Rami watched quietly from a corner. He approached Ilyas and asked, "Will they believe you one day? They seem angry."

Ilyas smiled and patted Rami's shoulder. "Faith is like a little palm tree," he said. "It needs time and care to grow and become strong."

PROPHET ILYAS

The villagers felt differently from one another. Some were stubborn and refused to listen. One said loudly, "If we stop worshipping the idols, we will lose everything! How do we know Allah will answer us?"

Others watched silently. They were unsure and thought about what Ilyas had said, but they were afraid of the others' anger.

PROPHET ILYAS

On a very hot day, the villagers gathered in the square and told Ilyas, "If you are telling the truth, ask your God to send us rain."

PROPHET ILYAS

Ilyas calmly raised his hands and prayed to Allah with great faith. Suddenly, the wind stirred, clouds filled the sky, and raindrops began falling gently. Then the rain grew heavier until the fields were well watered.

The people watched in amazement. One man said quietly, "How could this happen? The idols have done nothing."

PROPHET ILYAS

Rami suddenly felt brave. He stood up and said loudly, "I believe in Allah, whom Ilyas called upon. He always hears us."

Some of the people who had been unsure approached Ilyas. "How can we learn more about Allah? Please help us," they asked. Those who had remained stubborn went away angrily. But the little seed of faith had been planted.

PROPHET ILYAS

Ilyas looked at Rami and smiled. "Your courage today is like that palm tree beginning to grow," he said. "It will grow and become strong through your faith."

PROPHET ILYAS

The people returned to their homes beneath a clear sky full of shining stars. Rami felt proud because he had chosen the truth.
