In a small, beautiful village, Yaser sat on the doorstep of his house. He looked down at the ground, his face full of sadness. His grandmother Amina came over and asked gently, "What is troubling you, Yaser?"

Yaser lifted his head. "I argued with my friends at school," he said. "I do not understand why they disagree with me, and I do not want to argue with them." His grandmother smiled kindly. "Come and sit with me and the other children," she said. "I have a story that may help you understand what you are going through."

The children gathered around their grandmother beneath the shade of a large tree. "Today, I will tell you about a great prophet whom Allah sent to help people make peace," she said. "His name was Al-Yasa."

Sami, Yaser's older brother, raised his hand. "Was he strong like the other prophets?" he asked. Their grandmother smiled. "Yes, but his strength came from his patience and wisdom, not his muscles."

PROPHET AL-YASA

Al-Yasa lived at a time when people treated one another unfairly. They had forgotten Allah's commands and lived in constant disagreement. Allah sent him to teach them to worship Allah alone and to be just. But it was not easy. A cruel leader stopped people from listening to him.

Little Layla interrupted her grandmother. "How could he bear all of that?" she asked.

"He was patient and knew that Allah was with him," her grandmother answered. "Even when he faced injustice, he spoke kindly and showed wisdom."

PROPHET AL-YASA

One day, the village was suffering from a terrible drought. Prophet Al-Yasa asked Allah to send rain. He raised his hands towards the sky and prayed with deep faith. Suddenly, clouds began gathering, and a gentle wind blew. Then heavy rain fell. The people were happy and thanked Allah.

Yaser looked closely at his grandmother. "Did they begin following him after that?" he asked. She shook her head. "Not everyone. Some believed, and their faith grew stronger, but the cruel leader remained stubborn."

Prophet Al-Yasa kept teaching people that true strength is not in anger or injustice, but in spreading goodness and fairness. A few people began working with him, and the village became calmer and more peaceful. Even the cruel leader began noticing the change.

Their grandmother raised her eyebrows. "Do you know what happened?" she asked. The children looked at her in surprise. She continued, "The leader began to change. When he saw the effect of cooperation and wisdom, he decided to stop his cruelty, little by little."

Their grandmother ended the story. "Patience and wisdom can change everything," she said. "What do you think, Yaser? Could you try speaking kindly to your friends instead of becoming angry?"

The next day, Yaser gathered his friends beneath the large tree. "Let us play a new game together," he said. "We do not need to argue." His friends' expressions began to change, and they agreed. They laughed, played, and felt happy.

PROPHET AL-YASA

When Yaser returned home, his grandmother was waiting for him. "You are like Prophet Al-Yasa now," she said proudly. "You have helped hearts make peace."
