Long ago, there was a kind-hearted prophet named Dhul-Kifl. He lived in a small house surrounded by beautiful trees. He loved worshipping Allah. He prayed at night, fasted during the day, and lovingly helped people without ever becoming angry.

People loved him because he was very fair. If someone came with a problem, he listened calmly and then judged fairly. But sometimes he became tired because he worked so hard. He liked to rest with a nap after noon to regain his energy.

PROPHET DHUL-KIFL

Far away, Iblis watched Dhul-Kifl with envy and resentment. He angrily told the devils around him, "Go after this man! Try to tempt him and distract him from his worship!" But when the devils tried and failed, Iblis said, "I will go to him myself. I will make him angry and cause him to do wrong."

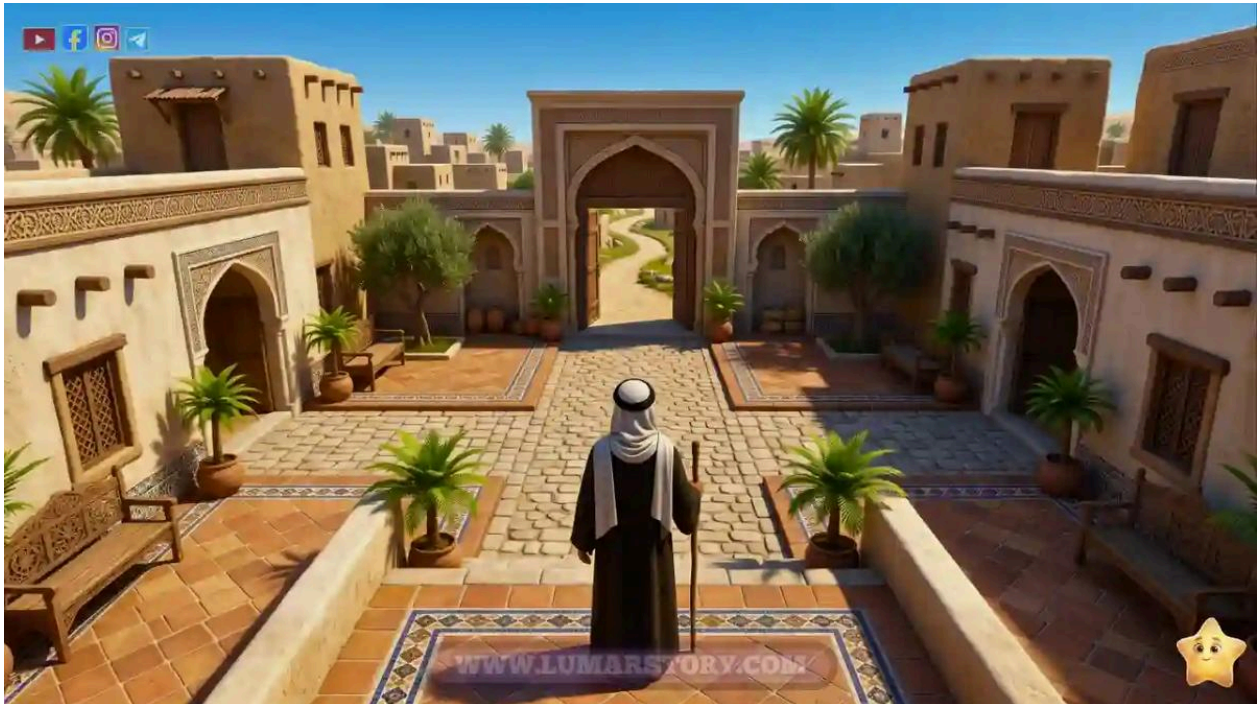

One day, Dhul-Kifl returned home for his nap after a tiring morning. Suddenly, he heard a knock at the door. When he opened it, he saw an old man who looked sad. The man was Iblis in disguise.

"Kind prophet, I have a serious problem. Please help me," the man said.

The prophet smiled and answered kindly, "Come to the court tomorrow, and I will solve your problem."

The next day, Dhul-Kifl sat in the court waiting a long time for the old man. But the man did not come. When the session ended and the prophet returned home to rest and take his nap, he heard another knock at the door.

The prophet opened the door, and there was the same old man, complaining, "They tricked me again and did not give me what was rightfully mine."

Although Dhul-Kifl felt very tired and exhausted, he listened calmly. "Come to the court tomorrow," he said, "and I will stand by you until you receive your rights." Then the man disappeared, and the worried prophet kept thinking about him through the night, unable to sleep.

PROPHET DHUL-KIFL

On the third day, because he was so tired, Dhul-Kifl told one of his men, "Do not let anyone come near my door while I take my nap today."

But when the guard stopped Iblis, who was still disguised as the old man, Iblis found a small hole in the house and slipped inside. He began knocking loudly on the door from within, making an annoying noise to stop the prophet from resting.

Dhul-Kifl woke suddenly, still very tired. He wondered how the man had entered while the guard was outside. He looked at him with the light of faith and recognised who he really was.

"You are not an ordinary man. You are Iblis!" he said.

Iblis laughed and admitted his failure. "Yes. I wanted to make you angry, but you are stronger than I am."

The noble prophet smiled. "My patience and faith in Allah are stronger than all your tricks," he said. Iblis disappeared, angry and defeated, and the prophet returned happily to his work, steadfast and good.
