PROPHET LUT

In a village called Sodom, the houses stood close together, and rivers flowed quietly between the fields. The villagers lived lives full of fun, but they did wrong things and ignored good behaviour. This made Allah's Prophet Lut, peace be upon him, feel sad for them.

PROPHET LUT

Lut, peace be upon him, lived in a simple house with his wife and two daughters. Day and night, he called his people to worship Allah and leave their shameful deeds behind. But they strongly rejected him and mocked him.

"My people, worship Allah alone, and stop doing things that harm you," he told them. But they laughed and said, "Why do you want us to change our lives? We are happy!"

PROPHET LUT

One day, while Lut was sitting near his house, he saw three strangers approaching. They were neatly dressed, and their faces were bright. Lut welcomed them and invited them into his home.

The men sat quietly, and Lut felt there was something special about them. But he was worried, because the villagers were known for treating strangers badly.

Before long, the villagers began gathering around Lut's house. They shouted and demanded that the men come outside. Lut went out and said, "My people, do not hurt my guests! Respect my home!"

But the people remained stubborn. Then one of the men said gently, "Lut, do not be afraid. We are angels sent by Allah. We have come to tell you that punishment will fall upon your people who have insisted on their evil deeds."

Lut felt awe and gratitude. "What about me and the believers in my family?" he asked.

The angels answered, "Leave the village at night, and do not look back, whatever happens."

That night, Lut gathered his family. "We must leave now," he said. "Remember, do not look back, whatever you hear." They began walking quietly, with the moon lighting their way. His daughters held his hands confidently, but his wife hesitated. She thought about her life in the village and felt longing for it.

As they moved away, the ground began to shake, and the wind grew louder. Lut's wife could not resist looking back. When she turned, she stopped where she stood, while Lut and his daughters kept walking steadily. At sunrise, they stood on a distant hill, looking at the village that had become nothing but ruins.

PROPHET LUT

In a reassuring voice, Lut told his daughters, "Faith in Allah is what saves us. We must be patient and always follow the right path."

The older daughter said, "We have learned that standing firm for the truth makes us strong."

The younger daughter added eagerly, "And we will keep calling people to goodness, just as you have, Father."

Lut looked lovingly at his daughters. "You are our hope," he said. "With faith and patience, we can build a better life."
